

Serving People & Interest the Public

ALUMNI MAGAZINE | FALL 2011 | Volume 03 Number 02

IMMIGRATION | Anne Pilsbury | Fernando Chang-Muy | Amy Novick

Message from the Dean

Dear Alumni,

It's no surprise that so many of our alumni have specialized in immigration law.

Many immigrants are among the most vulnerable of our residents. They suffer all the same problems as the rest of us but often do so with an even more porous safety net and often without the benefit of speaking and writing English. Some have suffered torture and discrimination in their country of origin, only to find more discrimination awaiting them in America. Many alums, some motivated by the desire to redress some of the wrongs of American foreign policy, have chosen to represent asylum-seekers and other refugees from oppression around the world. Others work on behalf of those from more elite backgrounds seeking work visas, and some handle all sorts of cases, including preventing the deportation of immigrants for minor offenses or for crimes they did not commit at all, which is the focus of our new Immigration and Human Rights Clinic.

Speaking of our new Clinic, I must, once again, give thanks to Carolyn Waller, '77, herself an award-winning immigration attorney, who spearheaded the effort to create the clinic—initially by making a $10,000 donation in memory of Father Jim Healy, '82, a Catholic priest and immigration rights activist who died of AIDS many years before. But Carolyn did much more than donate—she founded and chaired for many years the Center for Immigration Law and Practice, building relationships with various Lutheran Church entities who partnered with the School of Law and its alumni to fund and support it. Alums Amy Novick, '84, and Mary Brittingham, '80, served with Carolyn on the Board, and the late Michael Maggio, '78, and Candace Kattar, '81, donated many thousands of much-needed dollars.

In this edition, we shine the spotlight on three of our many amazing immigration attorney advocates, Anne Pilsbury, '75, Fernando Chang-Muy, '82, and Amy Novick. Each story is amazing and inspiring in its own right, each having used the law to make life better for many, many newcomers to our shores. And in our “Notes” section, you will see listings of dozens of other immigration attorneys, many of whom no doubt deserve the same acclaim as our featured alums for their decades of tireless advocacy, including many who serve the federal government or are professors of immigration law.

Enjoy!

Shelley Broderick

Dean and Professor of Law,
University of the District of Columbia
David A. Clarke School of Law

4

Anne Pilsbury

Anne Pilsbury, '75—She could have stayed a small town lawyer, but time and again, Anne has been drawn back to go to war for the powerless.

8

Amy Novick

Amy Novick, '84—Her zeal to defend the unwelcomed and oppressed extends to teaching tactics to help students at her alma mater fight for human rights.

12

Fernando Chang-Muy

Fernando Chang-Muy, '82—With Antioch's emphasis on theory and practice, he found his voice, a method of instructing others, and his life's calling.

16

More Alumni in Immigration

Consulting with international organizations, teaching immigration law, fighting for the oppressed—our alumni do it all.

Anne Pilsbury, '75 | IMMIGRATION

Anne Pilsbury

It was 5 a.m. when the men broke in and roused 14 immigrants from their beds and cuffed them in a Queens, New York, building. The intruders were agents from Immigration and Customs Enforcement, acting without a warrant.

“We were all so scared,” Jose Matias Prezantin, 30, said later, describing the raid in New York four years ago. “They didn’t give us time to get dressed. They handcuffed us all barefoot.”

After interrogating Prezantin and members of his family and detaining them until 6 p.m., the ICE ordered them deported.

But Anne Pilsbury, ’75, said not so fast.

Prezantin and his family, waiting in immigration courts ever since, have a tireless advocate in Anne, director of Brooklyn-based Central American Legal Assistance.

“These cases are really important because they’re the first to consider the issue whether immigration agents can bust into your bedroom at night,” she told the press. Anne maintained that all evidence gathered during that break-of-dawn raid must be thrown out because there’s nothing ambiguous about the Fourth Amendment.

She won the first round, with an immigration judge agreeing the raid produced unreasonable searches and seizures. But post-9/11 state power has stalled the case, with the Department of

“I went to law school because in D.C. anybody who gets to do anything interesting is a lawyer.”

Homeland Security appealing the verdict. Last December the Board of Immigration Appeals agreed with the government that all evidence taken in the raid is admissible. But then in June the appeals board, citing the Fourth Amendment, cancelled deportation orders for two Salvadoran men Anne and CALA represent who were rounded up in a case similar to the Queens raid.

It's now a battle to see if Homeland Security will appeal that case and what the consequences will be for Prezantin and his family. A battle? Or just another day at the office for Anne?

Trial by fire

She could have stayed a small town lawyer, handling business transactions, real estate, or the odd divorce. But time and again, Anne has been drawn back to go to war for the powerless.

Raised in northern New Jersey, Anne came of age in the 1960s, working in journalism and government. After college at the University of Pennsylvania, she worked as a “copy girl”—“Yes, that’s what they called me”—at the Christian Science Monitor in Boston before going to work for the New York City Welfare Department. “That was enough to send me back to school,” Anne said.

After completing a graduate degree in political science at American University, she landed a job at the Council of the District of Columbia, a time she described as one of great idealism and catastrophe, especially when the Capital exploded in riots in April 1968 following the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. The city burned for five days. More than 13,000 federal troops were in the streets. Twelve people were killed, 6,100 arrested and 1,200 buildings torched.

Anne went back to school again, this time enrolling at Antioch. “I went to law school because in D.C. anybody who gets to do anything interesting is a lawyer,” she said, only half joking.

Why Antioch? “I think because at the time they wanted people with real experience involved in the real world, and that was me,” she said. There were radical, innovative ideas in the air at Antioch, which attracted her, she added, but also the new law school stressed the fundamentals of practice.

She found a teacher whose passion still inspires her. “Burt Weschler taught us to use the federal courts to vindicate rights,” she said, still able to recite by heart what Weschler never failed to cite, language from Bell v. Hood: “Where federally protected rights have been invaded, it has been the rule from the beginning that courts will be alert to adjust their remedies so as to grant the necessary relief.”

As true now as in 1946 when the ruling was written, Anne said. “The Supreme Court in that case was dealing with the same issue we are litigating today – illegal home entry and arrests by federal agents.”

Beating Leviathan

Anne was at the heart of a landmark decision that exposed and punished abusive tactics by the state and directed at individuals and movements. The case is Hobson v. Wilson, launched in October 1977. The case emerged from the Watergate investigations, when it was revealed that a secret FBI division named Counter Intelligence Program, or COINTELPRO, not only spied on American citizens and organizations, but at J. Edgar Hoover's direct order, agents were charged to "expose, disrupt, misdirect, discredit or otherwise neutralize" the activities of multiple activist organizations.

She worked with legendary progressive lawyer David Rein—"I started as his gofer"—suing individual agents. After a year, Anne moved to a small town in Maine. "I thought, 'This case is so outrageously wrong it'll be over in a year,'" she remembered. It was a time to turn down the volume, live a country life, and enjoy the work of a single practitioner.

But when David Rein died of a heart attack she was back in D.C., handling the case. It didn't take a year. "Soup to nuts, it took ten years," she said, ending in a settlement, where the plaintiffs were handsomely rewarded and "we got substantial attorney fees," Anne said.

The birth of CALA

Back in Maine, she continued her practice and did what never fails to thrill her. "I walk in the woods," she said.

In the 1970s she had been a co-counsel for the Center for Constitutional Rights. Working there educated her on Central American issues and the proxy wars the United States was funding against leftist movements.

In 1985 in Maine she met a nun who was working in Guatemala with campesinos struggling against right wing military dictatorships. "I realized that here, the worst thing that could happen is you would lose your job," Anne said "These people were losing their lives."

Maine was going to have to get along without her again. Through the activist grapevine, she heard about a church in the Williamsburg section of Brooklyn, Transfiguration Catholic Church, helping immigrants fleeing politically motivated violence in their home countries.

Anne set up the Central American Legal Assistance in the basement. She litigated the first national class action against a sitting immigration judge, winning an injunction against his abuse of authority. Through CALA, she's won major asylum cases in the Second Circuit.

Williamsburg is fashionable now, but not when CALA moved in more than 20 years ago. Some things haven't changed, though. "Our office still floods when it rains, but other than that—and very low pay—it's a neat place to work," Anne said.

On the staff of seven are two attorneys, including Heather Axford, who came on board as an intern in 2006, and isn't shy about praising her boss and colleague.

"I learn as much from Anne's skilled oral arguments in federal court as I do from her ability to gain the trust and confidence of a survivor of torture," Heather said. "She's a great example of why more experienced attorneys should stay in direct services—the benefit to the client is immeasurable."

Maine hasn't been totally abandoned. "I spend about a month there every year," Anne said. "I have a little solar cabin, and I walk in the woods." ■

Amy Novick

It's a good bet that if you asked Steve King about Amy Novick, '84, the Republican congressman from Iowa would not have kind things to say. The same goes for his colleagues, Minnesota's Michelle Bachmann and Ben Quayle of Arizona.

All of the above—with Mr. King heading the pack—made Amy's and Immigrants' List's (IL's) "Immigration Hall of Shame," a top ten list, as she wrote, "of the leading marshals of the anti-immigration reform agenda." The list wasn't circulated among immigration lawyers as a joke e-mail but was published on The Huffington Post in April.

King took top (dis)honors for, among other things, comparing immigrants to "livestock," or proclaiming you can often tell immigrants are illegal by the kind of shoes they're wearing.

For Amy and IL, the list is an essential outing of public officials who are "obstructing the immigration reform that Americans want, need, and deserve." In August an updated list with new shame inductees went up on The Huffington Post. Amy wrote: "Every time an opponent of immigration reform engages in a campaign of fear and misinformation, that's just another win for the dangerous status quo."

Speaking recently, Amy said, "We have ten million people in this country, undocumented, who can't participate and are facing Draconian laws." She noted the last serious immigration reforms occurred more than a generation ago. "And now everyone knows nothing will be done until after the next election."

"I'd really like to help immigrants who already live here legalize and see them become full participants in American society."

Amy Novick , '84 | IMMIGRATION

There's also hypocrisy at play. "Even the most conservative people wax nostalgic about their immigrant heritages," Amy said. "It seems that for many people, after they came, they want to just shut the door."

She can play a mean media game to score points for her mission, but she walks the walk through her of counsel role with The Haynes Immigration Law Firm in Washington, D.C. Amy has successfully united parents with their adopted children when the State Department had ruled the children were not orphans. She's obtained "extraordinary ability" status for many immigrants to enter the United States, including an undocumented ballet dancer, and worked on a successful lawsuit compelling the government to act in a case of ideological exclusion of a Bolivian political scientist. Mostly though she represents regular, ordinary folks trying to do the right thing when it comes to immigration. She also serves on the American Immigration Council's Board of Trustees and is active with Immigrants' List, the pro-immigration political action committee.

Amy's zeal to defend the unwelcomed and oppressed extends to teaching tactics to students at her alma mater to fight for human rights. And she was a founding member of the board of directors of The D.C. School of Law's Center for Immigration Law and Practice, now a formal clinic at the school.

The travellers

Amy's roots go back to "Bloodlands," from where Timothy Snyder drew his new book's title. These are the open plains of Eastern Europe caught between warring nation states, with generations of average people trapped in the middle of an historical meat grinder. She grew up in an extended family in New Jersey, where her father and mother ran a small shop. Her grandparents, immigrants who had come from Belarus and Russia, lived upstairs.

"They pretty much left because of pogroms and anti-Semitism," she said, describing the older generation as being stoic and reticent when speaking about their European past. "They'd talk sometimes about their hometowns, but not the countries they'd lived in. And they spoke Yiddish, especially if they wanted to talk about things they didn't want children to hear."

She was politically formed in high school, catching the wave of the anti-war movement and the McGovern campaign. At Clark University in Worcester, MA, she studied government with an emphasis on international relations. She also studied abroad at a London School of Economics program and a semester in Israel, working on a kibbutz and attending the University of Haifa. Remembering Israel, Amy grows pensive especially when she speaks of spending time in the Sinai Desert. "It's beautiful... No, it's phenomenal."

Recently she took a sentimental journey back to London with her two children, Kenny and Carly, and husband Tom Clark, '82, who works for the National Labor Relations Board.

“It was fun to show them where I’d lived,” she said. But the Proustian taste-memory of her London year remains elusive. “I loved a certain kind of biscuit, McVitie’s Digestives,” she said. “Close friends still give them to me, but for some reason, they never taste the same.”

An advocate with empathy

With a degree, and experience in the wide world, Amy thought she was finished with school. “I wanted to get a job and go to work,” she said. But working for a while as an administrative assistant typing amicus briefs for a human rights organization was a clue her talents would be better employed writing those briefs.

She chose Antioch because of the hands-on approach. “Very few law schools had clinics in the first year,” Amy said. Walking into a classroom on her first day, she knew she’d made the right choice. “There was a bumper sticker on the board that said: ‘Question Authority.’ And it meant not just the government, but all authority, including our professors.”

She became interested in immigration law right away and was headed overseas once more after scoring an internship to do research for The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in Geneva.

Back home, she became editor of Antioch’s Law Review and was launched on a career as one of the premiere immigration advocates in the country, working diligently and often behind the scenes as deputy director of the American Immigration Lawyers Association (AILA) for almost 20 years. She ran AILA’s education program—helping to teach lawyers to be better lawyers—to later shining a spotlight on anti-immigrant politicians on one of the sharpest political websites on the current scene and in private practice.

Amy said that many of her clients are immigrants who have been here a long time and feel “very Americanized.” She’s represented everyone from low-income and working people to a documentary photographer to a ballroom dancer. One of her clients, Richard Allen, a British economist, wanted to apply for a green card for himself, his wife, and daughter. Amy helped secure the papers in a year’s time.

“She was clear, straight forward, and friendly,” Allen said. “When I questioned her opinion on some points relating to the drafting of recommendations, she would say, ‘You may think I’m exaggerating my skills and qualities, but I know what will impress the U.S. government officials.’ This is a good measure both of Amy’s skills as an attorney, and her warmth and empathy as a human being.”

One goal of hers is to represent artists who want to come, live, and work here. “I’d love to be able to be paid in art. But mostly,” she said, “I’d like to see meaningful immigration reform come soon. I’d really like to help immigrants who already live here legalize and see them become full participants in American society.” ■

Fernando Chang-Muy, '82 | IMMIGRATION

Fernando Chang-Muy

At a conference at Rutgers University on U.S refugee policy, the discussion turned to an incident 70 years ago when a ship filled with Jewish passengers, fleeing almost certain death at the hands of the Nazis, was turned away from the safe harbors of America. One panelist, Fernando Chang-Muy, '82, said, “The more things change, the more they remain the same.”

He explained that the issues of immigration and refugees are identical to the ones afflicting European people running for their lives in the 1930s and 1940s.

“People A hating people B,” Fernando told the conference. “What has changed are their faces. They are more likely to be Asian or African.”

As the Thomas O’Boyle Lecturer in Law at the University of Pennsylvania, where he teaches refugee law and policy, Fernando is unquestionably one of the world’s most vetted experts and knowledgeable scholars on displaced and oppressed people. But he doesn’t just find his information, insight, and values at the library. Attempting an escape from bigotry and poverty by crossing borders and fighting for dignity is in Fernando’s blood. Swarthmore College found that out in the early 1990s. School officials were looking for an individual to lead its newly minted Intercultural Center. The search committee was hoping to find someone with

“But that’s how I got to law school—
to learn a way to advocate for myself.”

a powerhouse CV to counsel and work with Asian, Hispanic and gay students. Hearing this, Fernando thought: “Is this my dream job or what?”

Swarthmore quickly hired the Chinese-Cuban American gay lawyer and teacher.

Frying pan to fire

During the first part of Fernando’s father’s life, he had lots of luck. All bad. Escaping tyranny in China in the 1950s, he left his homeland and landed in Cuba, where he settled down, met his wife, and Fernando was born. It wasn’t long before he was on the move again, leaving Communist Cuba for America.

Fernando considers himself lucky. “Growing up there were many influences from my parents, their status as immigrants, and all the challenges they overcame,” he said. “I also had teachers in the religious schools I attended who emphasized charity and serving others.”

His chosen profession was, in retrospect, preordained. “My parents were always harassing me to call the immigration lawyer to ask about relative so-and-so,” he remembered. “My parents didn’t speak English so I was the bridge between home and outside.”

But it was literature and not the law that was the driving passion when he was a student. After completing a bachelor’s degree in literature at Loyola University in New Orleans, he went on to Georgetown University to study literary theory.

“I was studying to get a PhD and proposed a thesis topic which the committee thought wasn’t esoteric enough,” Fernando said. His idea was to turn his thesis into a textbook for high school teachers on how to teach literature from a Marxist, feminist, and structuralist perspective. When he was turned down he decided to sue, and he applied to law school to learn how. “A smarter thing to do would have been to talk to a lawyer who would have told me I had no grounds,” Fernando said. “But that’s how I got to law school—to learn a way to advocate for myself.”

Antioch

Literature would never be abandoned, but Fernando at Antioch found his voice, a method of instructing others, and his life’s calling.

“The best things about Antioch were the teachers and my fellow students, all of whom shared the same ideal of public interest law,” Fernando said. “I learned about sharing and collaboration and study groups where we all supported each other. And Antioch’s focus on nuts and bolts helps me to this day in structuring my classes.”

One example is an excellent lecture class on refugee law he gives at Penn. “I try to combine theory and practice—à la Antioch—by having students actually interview asylum in seekers to see how law impacts real people.”

Bonds made at Antioch have shown themselves to be unbreakable. “I lived in a group home for a year with a great group of fellow students and after all these years we’re still in touch with each other,” Fernando said.

Serving

After graduation, Fernando got a fellowship administered by Howard University and funded by Congress to do organizing and legal advocacy work in Philadelphia. Part of his responsibilities was to represent asylum seekers from Central America.

He then took a job at the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. With his typical wit, Fernando said he was given the job “to get me off their back and stop papering them with asylum applications.”

He became one of the most valuable employees at the U.N., transferring to a post as Human Rights Officer in a global program on AIDS, where he taught governments and NGOs to set up policies for people suffering from the affliction.

He was on airplanes almost constantly, travelling to Europe and Asia and every airport in between. Back in the States, he began serving as an administrator in academia, and later, through a federal government grant, helped set up the Center for Survivors of Torture in Philadelphia, which grew to more than 30 centers around the country.

“Most of the participants in the ‘90s were from Africa, though there were others from Central and South America and Asia,” Fernando said. In his work he advocated for Albanians in Greece, Vietnamese in Indonesia, and Haitians at Guantanamo and in Jamaica.

“After 9/11, the government started vetting more carefully persons who were in the pipeline to be resettled in the U.S.

as refugees,” he said. Although good for national security, he added, it’s caused hardships for vulnerable people who must leave untenable situations but have remained trapped outside, denied the promise of America.

All in the family

Helen Cunningham met Fernando in the early 1990s when he applied for a grant at the Samuel S. Fels Fund in Philadelphia, which she directs. “I was impressed with his no nonsense yet humorous approach to his work,” Cunningham said.

A friendship was born. “In the intervening years I’ve come to know Fernando, his partner, and daughter,” Cunningham said. “What a family. A white Jewish man, a Chinese Cuban man, and a black daughter. I’ve come to love all three, each for his or her qualities, but together as a tight, warm family.”

Len Rieser, a director of a public interest law firm in Philadelphia, and Fernando have been together for 30 years. They met when Len was a lawyer with the U.S. Department of Justice in the Civil Rights Division and Fernando was completing an Antioch placement.

“So I have Antioch to thank,” Fernando said.

When they settled in Philadelphia they adopted a ten month old baby, Isabel, now 18 and a sophomore in college.

“Life has been great and good and I’ve been, incredibly, incredibly lucky,” Fernando said. ■

More Alumni in Immigration

Lesley Guyton, '75, has practiced entirely in the area of Immigration Law since 1986 when a young woman from Mexico walked into her office (Lesley was an Indiana legal services attorney) with a “bag and baggage” letter from the then INS telling her to report for deportation. With the help of experienced immigration attorneys, Lesley was able to stop the woman’s deportation and assist her in obtaining her green card. In 1988, Lesley moved to Minnesota and set up her own practice which she now shares with her daughter. They have a varied practice but, after many years of handling political asylum cases, they now concentrate on family and employment immigration cases. She recently added a blog to her website, www.guytonlaw.com, and the first article is on recent pronouncements on “prosecutorial discretion.” guytonhome@comcast.net

Anne Pilsbury, '75 (see feature).

Roberto Tschudin-Lucheme, '75, is an Immigration Attorney/Chocolateer (I kid thee not!) at Private Practice/

Tschudin Chocolates & Confections in Glastonbury, Conn. 860-633-1962. Tschocolates@gmail.com

Paul Soreff, '76, is an immigration attorney in Seattle, WA, and was listed as a “Superlawyer” in Superlawyer Magazine. 206-282-1955. psoreff@sorefflaw.com

Linda Chin, '77, is an immigration attorney in Concord, MA. lindachin@lindachin.com

Carolyn Waller, '77, now retired after a long and heralded career as an immigration lawyer, teacher, and immigrants’ rights activist.

She was the prime mover behind the creation of the Center for Immigration Law and Practice, a joint effort among alumni, several local Lutheran Churches, and the School of Law. The Center recently became the School of Law’s Immigration and Human Rights Clinic.

David Berry, '78, is a founding partner of Berry, Appleman & Leiden, LLP (CA), a nine-office, 60-attorney international immigration law firm. Over the years, his work has encompassed every aspect of U.S. and global corporate immigration. David currently focuses on working with human resources professionals to optimize their companies’ immigration programs. He serves as the managing partner of the firm’s Global Migration Practice, addressing the worldwide challenges of corporate migration, mergers and acquisitions, and global compliance. David has served as Chairperson of the Northern California American Immigration Lawyers Association (AILA) and the Bar Association of San Francisco Immigration Committee, as well as national Business and Industry Liaison to AILA. David has provided testimony to the United States Commission to Reform Immigration, and he has served on the boards and committees of a number of immigration and global migration organizations. David also served as Assistant Professor of Immigration Law at Hastings College of Law.

Bart Klein, '78, is an immigration attorney in Seattle, WA. bart.klein@bartklein.com 206-624-3787.

Professor Maryellen Fullerton, '78, at Brooklyn Law, is an expert on asylum and refugee law. Her research focuses on comparative refugee law and the empirical and normative aspects of the worldwide effect of the Common European Asylum System. Her worldview and teaching methods have been shaped by her academic commitments, first as a Fulbright Scholar in Belgium and Germany, later as a German Marshall Fund Fellow in Hungary, and as a visiting scholar at the Center for Advanced Studies in Social Sciences in Spain. She is the Editor in Chief of the Refugee Law Reader, a comprehensive on-line resource available in English, Spanish, French, and Russian for the rapidly evolving field of international refugee law. Among her most recent works are her co-authored casebooks, Forced Migration: Law and Policy and Immigration and Citizenship Law: Process and Policy, which are used by more than 100 law schools and universities throughout the United States. In addition to teaching and researching, she served as a reporter for Human Rights Watch and headed several human rights missions in Germany. She was a consultant for the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and was active in projects providing support to Refugee Law Clinics in Eastern Europe. Prior to joining the faculty in 1980, Professor Fullerton served as law clerk to Judge Francis Van Dusen of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit and to Judge Frank Johnson, Jr. of the U.S. District Court for the Middle District of Alabama. 718-780-7925.

maryellen.fullerton@brooklaw.edu

Michael Maggio, '78 (deceased), was a longtime immigrant rights advocate and immigration attorney. He founded Maggio-Kattar (www.maggio-kattar.com) with his wife Candace Kattar, '80, and was a major supporter of the UDC-DCSL Center for Immigration Law and Practice. www.maggio-kattar.com/about/community/founders-day-benefit

Hon. Robert Owens, '78, is Assistant Chief Administrative Judge at the U.S. Department of Justice’s Office of Immigration Review in Northern Virginia. Robert.Owens@usdoj.gov

David Rothwell, '78, has had an immigration law practice in the District since 1981. From 1984 to 1989, he was in solo practice. From 1989-1991 he was a partner in Goldfarb, Kaufman and O’Toole. Since 1991 he has been one of the founding partners in O’Toole, Rothwell, Nassau & Steinbach. (Jeff O’Toole, ASL '76, is his partner and does death penalty defense work.) Within the Dupont Circle firm, Rothwell has a practice group of three other immigration lawyers who represent hundreds of individuals, families, and businesses on immigration matters. The practice includes court work in Immigration Court and Federal Courts. (See Perez Vargas v Gonzalez 478 F3d 191 4th cir 2007.) 202-775-1550. www.otoolerothwell.com

Liliana Santos Caballero, '78, is an immigration lawyer in Silver Spring, MD. 301-565-5217. lscassociates@comcast.net

Hon. George Chew, '79, is an Immigration Court judge for the U.S. Dept. of Justice Executive Office of Immigration Review in New York City. 917-454-1040.

Julius Daugherty, '79, is a solo immigration law practitioner in Maryland. 410-292-2241. ijul@comcast.net

Mary Brittingham, '80, is a D.C. immigration attorney, law professor, and immigration law activist who, among numerous other volunteer efforts, served on the board of the School of Law's Center for Immigration Law and Policy. mbritt88@aol.com

Kitty Callaghan, '80, now the Managing Attorney for Western Massachusetts Legal Services in Northampton, MA, is a longtime immigration lawyer. kcallaghan@wmls.org

Newton Chu, '80, practices immigration law for Torkildson, Katz, Moore & Hetherington in Hilo, Hawaii. He is a director in the firm's Hawaii

Island office and his practice includes general corporate law, employment law, administrative licensing, and immigration law on all islands. He is a frequent lecturer on various topics concerning immigration and employment law. He has spoken nationally on behalf of the American Immigration Lawyers Association (AILA), and is past-Chair of the Hawaii Chapter of AILA. He co-authored "Employment Verification Systems—Where Are We and Where Are We Going" in the Immigration & Nationality Law Handbook 2006-07 Edition, AILA and "Is Your Event Secure?" in Immigration Options for Artists and Entertainers, AILA 2007. newtonc@torkildson.com

Maureen O'Sullivan-Pierce, '81, recently accepted an appointment as an immigration judge for the U.S. Department of Justice's Executive Office for Immigration Review. After Antioch, she earned an LLM in 1986 from Harvard University. From 1990 to October 2010, she was partner in Kaplan, O'Sullivan & Friedman in Boston. From 1986 to 1989 she was in private practice in Boston. From 1982 to 1985, she served as Director of the National Immigration Project of the National Lawyers Guild in Boston. From 1981 to 1982, she was in private practice in Washington, D.C. From 1980 to 1981, she served as a staff member of the Select Commission on Immigration and Refugee Policy in Washington, D.C. She has worked intermittently as an adjunct professor at various law schools since 1987. Judge O'Sullivan is a member of the Massachusetts Bar and the State Bar of California. She is married to Hon. Laurence Pierce, '81.

Carol Wolchok, '79, is Director of the American Bar Association's Commission on Immigration Policy and Practice in Washington, D.C. clwlaw@earthlink.net

Eugene C. Wong, '79, is an immigration law specialist in San Francisco. 415-956-4809. eugenecwong@gmail.com

Candace Kattar, '81, co-founded the Maggio + Kattar immigration law firm with her late husband Michael Maggio. www.maggio-kattar.com ckattar@identity.ws

Fernando Chang-Muy, '82 (see feature).

Francesco Isgro, '82, has served as Associate General Counsel at the U.S. Department of Justice and Chief of the Legal Opinion and Legal Advice Section at the former Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS). He is currently Senior Litigation Counsel in the Office of Immigration Litigation in the Civil Division of the U.S. Department of Justice and Acting Director of Training for the Civil Division where he is responsible for appellate litigation involving the rights of refugees under U.S. laws, the constitutional rights of non-citizens, and questions of statutory interpretation. He has conducted settlement negotiations and trials of class action suits and other complex cases. He supervises the work of junior lawyers and directs the training program for the Office of Immigration Litigation. Professor Isgro was Adjunct Professor of Immigration Law at Georgetown University Law Center from 1990-1999 and is a frequent lecturer at the USDOJ National Advocacy Center. He has published numerous articles in immigration law journals and generalized publications. He is the founder and editor of the Immigration Litigation Bulletin, a monthly publication of the United States Department of Justice and has taught immigration law at UDC-DCSL for many years. francesco.isgro@usdoj.gov

Susan Au Allen, '83.

Jeffrey M. Ford, '83, practices immigration law in the District. 202-393-6000.

Lydia Padilla, '83, is an immigration lawyer in New York City. 917-495-5035. pd1138@aol.com

Robert Poyner, '83, is an immigration lawyer in Washington, D.C. 202-537-0033. vanness@mindspring.com

Kathleen Vagt, '83, has been an immigration lawyer and Adjunct Professor of Immigration Law at the then-D.C. School of Law. 202-955-8500.

Shakun Drew, '84, is a Washington, D.C., immigration lawyer. 202-895-1648. ShakunDrew@verizon.net

David Garfield, '84, is a D.C. immigration attorney. 202-328-0605.

Amy Novick, '84 (see feature).

More Alumni in Immigration

John O'Leary, '84 (deceased), was a D.C. immigration attorney.

Margo Cowan, '85, an Arizona Public Defender featured in a previous alumni magazine, has practiced immigration law as a lay advocate when her NGO was designated the first community-based outreach center in the country by the U.S. Department of Justice in 1976. She co-founded the Sanctuary Movement during the Central American Wars and a few years ago founded, with others, No More Deaths, an effort to stop migrant deaths in the desert. Margo.Cowan@pima.gov

Arnulfo Chapa, '85, is an immigration lawyer in private practice in Washington, D.C. 202-882-1068. Arnolfochapa@gmail.com

Allan Ebert, '85, is President of Connectors Enterprises in Silver Spring, MD. 301-588-8822. connectorallan@gmail.com

Ty Mitchell, '85, has been an immigration attorney in Washington, D.C. for many years. 202-483-6053. tleemit2000@netzero.com

Manuel Rivera, '85, is a longtime immigration attorney in Maryland and the District. 703-807-2003. manuel.lawoffice@gmail.com
www.peoplesimmigrationlawyer.com

Aldo Caceres, '86, practices immigration law in Miami, FL. 305-541-6600.

Harry Goldwater, '86, practices immigration law in the District of Columbia. 202-628-5017. auh20h@gmail.com

Dora Herrera, '86, is a D.C. immigration lawyer. 202-429-0927.

Sylvia Rolinski, '86, has handled numerous immigration cases over the years, as well as a variety of international law among other matters. She is a partner of Rolinski Suarez LLC, which has offices in Varna, Bulgaria; Longwood, FL; Washington, D.C.; and Gaithersburg, MD. 301-987-0202. www.rolinski.com

John Whitfield, MAT '86, is an immigration lawyer in Brooklyn, N.Y. 718-452-2196. whitje50@aol.com

Anna Gallagher, '87, is a Shareholder at Maggio + Kattar in Washington, D.C., and head of the Litigation and Global Practice areas. Anna has practiced in the field of immigration and refugee law for more than two decades, working in the United States, Central America, and Europe. Her experience includes private practice, advocacy in the nonprofit sector, and several years in academia. In addition to her practice and teaching experience, Anna has authored articles and books on U.S. immigration and nationality issues. She is the author of West Thomson's Immigration Law Service 2d and co-author along with Thomas Hutchins of the Immigration Pleadings and Practice Manual. Anna also co-authored West Thomson's Immigration Trial Handbook with Maria Baldini-Potermin. She is the author of AILA's Focus on Private Bills & Pardons in Immigration (2008). She remains active in international refugee and migrant issues and is the President of the International Detention Coalition, an international nongovernmental organization dedicated to the promotion of human rights for refugees and migrants around the world who are subject to administrative detention. 202-483-0053. www.maggio-kattar.com/
agallagher@maggio-kattar.com

Diane McHugh Martinez, '87, earned an LL.M. from Washington College of Law in International Legal Studies in 1990 and has been practicing immigration law in the District for more than 20 years. dmchughmartinez@earthlink.net

Iftekhar Haq, '91, practices immigration law in the District. 202-236-6670. haqlaw@hotmail.com

Bob Malone, '91, is a D.C. immigration attorney. 202-387-2688. bobsmalone@msn.com

Emanuel Mpras, '94, handles immigration and other matters in Virginia and the District from his Annandale, VA office. 703-642-9042. www.mpraslaw.com

John L'Esperance, '95, is a partner at Duane Morris LLP in the District of Columbia. He practices in the areas of immigration and nationality law. He provides U.S. and global companies with a full range of immigration and naturalization legal services, including labor certification applications, immigrant visa petitions and applications to adjust status or for consular processing, as well as nonimmigrant visa petitions for new-hire employees, intracompany transferees and specialty occupations. Among John's clients are technology companies, including one of the world's leading developers and providers of information-infrastructure technology. He also represents foundations, universities, hospitals, and healthcare institutions, including the Devereux Foundation. JLEesperance@duanemorris.com

Athan Tsimpedes, '95, handles immigration cases in his District-based general practice. 202-772-3159. athan@tsimpedeslaw.com
www.tsimpedeslaw.com

Katherine Zill, '96, is an attorney for the U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement Service in Washington, D.C. where she served as head of her union local. She interned at Ayuda while in law school and participated in the U.S. Department of Justice Honors Program. zillk@aol.com

Jonathan Ai, '98, is an immigration law practitioner in Rockville, MD. jonathan@ailawpc.com
www.ailawpc.com

Debra G. Oliver, '98, is an immigration law practitioner in Silver Spring, MD. 301-367-4021. dgoesquire@aol.com

Anshu Pathak, '98, handles immigration matters in South Plainfield, NJ. apathak26@yahoo.com

Hilario "Larry" Mercado, '00, is an immigration attorney in private practice in Falls Church, VA. 703-532-3200.

Ali Nuernberg, '00, is an attorney for the U.S. Department of Homeland Security, U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement Service.

Toni Maschler, '04, is an immigration lawyer and an associate at the Law Offices of Richard S. Bromberg, a former Antioch School of Law faculty member. toni@bromberglaw.com

Nina Dang, '05, is an immigration attorney in private practice in Royal Palm Beach, FL. 866-567-4110. ninadanglaw@aol.com

Anthony Fasullo, '05, is an immigration attorney in private practice in northern Virginia. 703-864-1444. afasulloesq@gmail.com

David Goren, '05, practices immigration law in the District of Columbia.

Gena'Ve Ramirez, '05, practices immigration law in Silver Spring, MD. 301-588-8066. genave.ramirez@gmail.com

Carlos Piovanetti, '06, and Dana Riccoboni, '06, both work at Immigration Legal Services of Long Island. Carlos, who worked for the American Friends Service Committee after graduating is the Managing Attorney. Dana Riccoboni is head of the agency's domestic violence & human trafficking program. 631-617-5269. cpiovanetti@ilsoli.org and d.riccoboni@ilsoli.org.

Pamela Eclar Dieguez, '07, formerly an Asylum Officer, is now Program Manager for the Department of Homeland Security/Immigration and Customs Enforcement's Office of International Affairs in Washington, D.C. peclar@hotmail.com

Jimmy Davis, '08, has set up his own DC-based immigration firm. See www.davisimmigrationlaw.com/bio. Before that, he was an Associate at Paul Shearman Allen & Associates. While in school, Jimmy interned for the Capital Area Immigrants' Rights Coalition, where he successfully litigated a contested area of unsettled law before the Arlington Immigration Court and specialized in analyzing the immigration consequences of criminal convictions. Jimmy also clerked for Ai & Associates in Rockville, MD, where he worked on various immigration, family law, and First Amendment tort litigation. (See Jonathan Ai, '98.) In 2009, Jimmy was recognized for his "Outstanding Commitment to Defending the Rights and Dignity of Detained Immigrants" for his previous work at the CAIR Coalition. jimmy.davis125@gmail.com

Denise Greaves, '08, practices immigration law in Atlanta, GA. 404-287-2377. dgreaves@greaveslawgroup.com

Veronica Morales, '08, is an immigration law practitioner in the District of Columbia. morales.vw@gmail.com

Yesenia Polanco-Galdamez '08, handles immigration and criminal defense cases in North Carolina. yesenialpg@gmail.com

Lesley Ellefson-Porras, '09, practices immigration law in Northern Virginia. 703-596-0325, ext 21. Lesley@hainerporras.com

Nicole Schroeder, '09, has served in the Attorney General's Honors Program at the Department of Justice, Executive Office for Immigration Review, and as a law clerk and attorney advisor at the Headquarters Immigration Court in Falls Church, VA. She was a volunteer summer intern at the Headquarters Immigration Court in 2007 and an intern at Arlington Immigration Court through the Department of Justice's Summer Law Intern Program ("SLIP") in 2008. She has drafted more than 70 judicial opinions, motions, and memoranda for 10 Immigration Judges, who cover cases in 10 federal circuits, and she has investigated alleged judicial misconduct for the Office of the Chief Immigration Judge. She has had the privilege of working with two current members of the Board of Immigration Appeals and the current Chief Immigration Judge. During her law school internships with the Capital Area Immigrants' Rights Coalition and Washington Lawyers'

Committee for Civil Rights and Urban Affairs, she assisted asylum-seekers, detained immigrants, and other low-income individuals with their cases before immigration court and their applications for immigration benefits. While in UDC-DCSI's Legislation Clinic, she interned with the U.S. House of Representatives Subcommittee on Immigration, Citizenship, Refugees, Border Security, and International Law, and gained an invaluable understanding of immigration policy and the legislative process. Prior to law school, as Advocacy Associate at Refugees International, Nicole worked as part of a team to inform the United Nations agencies, U.S. Congressional staff, and U.S. State Department employees of humanitarian needs of displaced people in Kosovo and of Burmese refugees living in India and Bangladesh. Her advocacy in 2005 on behalf of the Roma population in Kosovo, who were suffering from severe lead poisoning in a camp established by the United Nations, resulted in the population being moved out of the contaminated area. Nicole.Schroeder@usdoj.gov

Kenneth D. McCall, '10, fluent in Japanese, is now practicing immigration law in Washington, D.C., and in Polk County, FL. 202-286-1407. kmccall799@yahoo.com.

Jacqueline B. Oudia, '10, is an attorney in the legal department at the Embassy of the Republic of Kenya where she advises on legal matters and analyzes and tracks relevant legislation affecting the Kenyan Diaspora in the United States, Mexico, and Columbia. She also develops a legal and legislative agenda and collaborates with legislators, state officials, and federal departments to support the Embassy's priorities. In addition, Jacqueline is accepting cases in the area of family immigration, including pro bono, through her solo-firm at www.oudialaw.com. At the embassy: 202-387-6101 ext. 14. jacqueline.oudia@kenyaembassy.com At Oudia Law: 202-670-6047. joudia@oudialaw.com

The University of the District of Columbia
Alumni Association
David A. Clarke School of Law
4200 Connecticut Avenue, NW
Washington, D.C. 20008

Tel: 202 274-7338

NONPROFIT ORG.
U.S. POSTAGE
PAID
PERMIT #9448
Washington DC

 UNIVERSITY OF THE
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA
DAVID A. CLARKE SCHOOL OF LAW